PART II.—CHAPTER LXII.

From 2 o'clock until nearly 4 the light from the window of the Brook cottage shone with a steady glow. Then it suddenly brightened, throwing a ruddy glary far out into the night. At last the window curtain, swayed by the freshening breeze from the lake, had hovered its fateful instant over the lamp and became hovered its fateful instant over the lamp and became a torch, carrying destruction. For a time the fire spread slowly, while the sanitarium, wrapped in deepest slumber, slept obliviously on.

Then a woman's piercing scream shattered the silence. "Fire! Fire!" Lights sprung up against the black mass of the main building, there was a hasty opening of windows, and startled voices were calling out. Then came the slamming of doors and hurrying footsteps.

footsteps.

"It's the Brook cottage," shouted Clark as he passed the room occupied by Rasher. "Hurry!"

Rasher, an overcoat thrown over his pajamas, leaped from his window and was among the first to reach

"Mary; Mary!" he called, and then saw her silhout-"Mary; Mary!" he called and then saw her silhoutted against the flames in the door of her room.

She was gazing in fascinated horror into the blazing mass of flames where lay the body of her mother.

Rasher drew her gently away.

"I'm afraid it's too late, Mary," he said, reading her thoughts, "but I'll try to get her." She held him

"No, no," she sobbed. "Don't leave me. O, how dreadful! Poor, dear mamma!"

The soof was blasing flereely, the flames leaping high above the tree tops and turning night into day. A couple of men had dragged up a hose, and then discovered the water had been turned off. Others were rushing up from the lake with buckets of water, which they futilely threw on to the flames. Clark, cool as usual, directed them to the roofs of adjoining cottages to stamp out the falling sparks. There was nothing else to do. Nothing could save the cottage. The best to be done was to prevent the fire spreading.

Realising the futility of saving the cottage, the southants of the sanitarium, all who could leave their beds, were grouped about in heatile mammabled garments, fascinated by that always dramatic thing, a burning building.

"I was just coming down," he said. "The noise of the fire awakened me. I don't see how it could have started."

"Probably a defective wire," suggested Clark, dryly, "Ah, very likely," agreed the doctor. "I must have them carefully examined." As they went down the stairs the doctor added: "O, this is terrible! I hope they got out Mrs. Brook's body."

Clark was silent, but his brows tightened in a frown. The doctor's words had started a chain of thought. It irritated him to think that it had not occurred to him sponer. The body of Mrs. Brook was the important bit of evidence for the coroner's inquest. Upon the post-morten hung the only hope of holding Cloven. Now that evidence had been destroyed. Clark's thoughts were now racing.

Of one thing he was certain—Cloven had not left his room between 2, when he retired, and nearly 4, when the fire broke out. It seemed unlikely that he could have started the fire, no matter how much he would be benefited by it.

Together they watched the fire as the heavy logs, which had been slower in burning, now crackled and roared. A stray comment from a little group caught Clark's attention.

"The night lamp might have tipped over," said a voice, and he noticed that it was a nurse who was speaking. As he moved nearer Dr. Cloven seized his arm and hurriedly pulled him away.

"Let us walk around the cottage," he said. "Perhaps your trained skill may get a ciew to this mystery. You remember, Mr. Clark, I suggested that you come to the cottage and watch over the body."

Yes, Clark remembered. He smiled rather grimly. He was thinking of the nurse's reference to a lamp. Cloven had said nothing of a lamp. Also he had not yet inquired about Mary Brook. Furthermore, he had paused to dress before coming down—all most significant circumstances. In the meantime, Dr. Cloven, having drawn him out of hearing of the surse, was taking volubly and with increasing confidence." This is a terrible thing to harpen, he was saying. Immediately on landing he received an official welcome from the mayor of Plymouth, Solomon Phillips, who recalled the fact that the Pilgrims sailed from the spot where he landed, and spoke of the long history of Anglo-American friendship. In replying Mr. Kellogg said he hoped to do all in his power to cement that friendship.

"It is an interesting time to be in Europe, and also a very critical time in the world's affairs," he said later in an interview. "The economic and political chaos existing in many parts of Europe calls for most tolerant and broad minded statesmanship, especially by the great powers. I am an optimist about the world. I believe that 1924 will be better and brighter than 1923 and that the world is steadily struggling back from the great conflict."

'Tiger Rose' Reveals She Belongs on Stage.

The Fir and the Palm By PRINCESS BIBESCO.

She loved the autumn—except for chrysanthemums, surely the most unflowery of flowers, though she rather liked the huge, wine colored ones like sheep dogs.

Would she, now that she was home again, find rest in the cool, soft arms of Helen's Court? She wondered. At first the dim loveliness had seemed as balm to her. Then, like figures in a nightmare hiding behind doors, memories had popped out and said "boo." She must purge the shadows of their ghosts, force the vases and carpets and chairs to be vases and carpets and chairs to look the termination of the control of the distance that he had traveled, "I hope she will," he added.

in the making to as nonnewaters mass as possible—otherwise they crumble, whether dry or sticky.

The recipe here repeated, from Dec. 16, is not only a sticky fruit cake, but does not need to have long ripening to be agreeable, although it does keep long. It is palatable to delicious the second day. It will do as well for a wedding cake—the dark of grootn's cake — as for a Christmas or New Year's cake: cake—as for a Christmas or New Year's cake:

Tor two pound cake: One-fourth of a pound of unsalted butter creamed one-fourth cup of sugar, two eggs, one-fourth cup of flour, twelve ounces of currants, eight ounces of raisins, five ounces of candied citron melon or a substitute, two ounces of candied orange peel, five ounces of figs, four ounces of blanched and coarsely chopped almonds, three tablespoons of molasses, a pinch of soda, two tablespoons of cold water beaten with the egg whites. Use large bowl and stiff long handled spoon, then hand, for mixing. Bake slowly in 300 degree oven for about two hours. Put raisins, orange peel, figs, and almonds through coarse disk of food chopper, flour all fruit, etc. If ever a scale is imperatively needed it is when making fruit cake.

Buttons are always running and just now they are running stronger than ever. Stressed in the autumn collections, this mode of trimming has come in for an even greater publicity in our mid winter showings. Usually these buttons are medium sized, and they range from plain bone or wood to covered and embellished types.

As an indication of the unexpected run of the button we may take today's frock of blue twill noted recently at a fashionable luncheon resort. For in this instance the buttons covered in self material which extend down the left side front of the frock have occupied the hem of the circular skirt. The belt is of the twill and the only color contrast is afforded by cuffs and collar of gray felt.

As regards the neck line, this present model furnishes us with one more example of the fact that the brombile ateau line is constantly giving way to

NEW YORA.—[Special Correspondence].—While the name of Rodolf Valentino awakens not the same gentiment in every male heart, some of them actually refusing to flutter at the sound of the great one's name, no matter what the standing of the film idol is in your home, you must admit he is always well dressed. We see by the rotogravures what his tasts these days is in full dress.

One point of note is that Mr. Valentino is favoring the single breasted white dress waistroon, which is in line with the general tendency of men of fashion who are responsible for style changes. The double breasted fad is probably on the wane. Mr. Valentino's waistroon, is cold wing variety, and his white changes after the color of the bold wing variety, and his white bow tie is in perfect proportion to this coliar, being of the liftes butterfly ow model. Exactly the proper amount of white cuff and collar is showing in still another way the fault-less faste of the man in question.

As yor the tail coat fivelf, it is one of those with square tails, instead of pointed—both are correct. The lapts and collar are stilk faced, and the lapses peaked. The buttons are boos. The trousers are plaited and are trimmed with one broad stilk band, instead of the alternative two.

When the Wagons Reached Town

BACK in the early days farmers hauled their grain to the Chicago market in wagons. There was no means of determining true values. Communication was slow. A famine might exist in one district and a surplus a short distance away. Neither district knew of the other's condition. The price paid for wagon grain was based on guesswork.

To better marketing conditions the Chicago Board of Trade was organized three quarters of a century ago. The situation immediately improved. As agriculture and commerce expanded, the present economic grain exchange system was evolved by the best minds of the nation.

Today there is an open, competitive, continuous market. The farmer's grain may be sold at any hour of any business day. The price is not reached "over the wagon." It is fixed by world supply and demand.

By maintaining the highest standards of commercial integrity found anywhere, by having in its membership men who have taken leadership in the upbuilding of the nation, the Chicago Board of Trade has developed a marketing system unsurpassed in the annals of commerce. The exchange serves both producer and consumer, for grain is marketed at a lower toll than exists in any other staple foodstuff.

Despite the whirling sands of political agitation and the flames of post-war unrest, the Board of Trade has maintained its position as hub of the world grain trade. This has been possible only because of the high efficiency of the present marketing system.

L tinue its amazing growth?" is a question frequently asked.

This is the 77th year of The Chicago Tribune.

In Civil War days-sixty years ago-The Tribune was an important national influence. At the time of the Spanish War-twenty-five years ago-The Tribune's scoops won international recognition.

When the World War began, The Chicago Tribune was enjoying sensational growth in circulation and advertising-growth which continued through the entire war period.

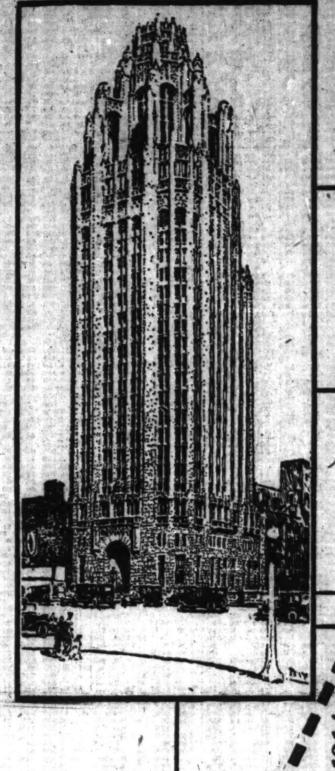

Observers of The Tribune's progress, decade after decade, predicted that after the war there would surely be a decrease.

But 1919 and 1920 saw universal expansion in which The Tribune shared, followed by a depression through which The Tribune battled ahead, proclaiming: "1921 Will Reward Fighters."

The year 1922 beat any previous year. And 1923 has surpassed 1922 by a large margin.

The chart on this page is drawn to scale to picture The Tribune's amazing growth in circulation.

The HEITMAN BOND & MORTGAGE CO. is not in the Building Contracting or Construction Business - directly, indirectly, through "Dummies," or in any other way.

The Company lends money on first mortgage only, to careful borrowers who have large equities, money in their enterprises and their banks. Such borrowers will not pay over 6 PER CENT.

The HEITMAN BOND & MORTGAGE CO. has, year in and year out, persistently advertised and pointed out that high interest and SAFETY of PRINCIPAL were not a combination available in conservative Chicago first mortgage investments;

THAT 5% INTEREST was the very highest obtainable with the margin of security ample to meet the requirements of all the Illinois statutes, including the Guardianship Act.

Next to U. S. Government Bonds and certain Municipals, our real estate first mortgage investments meet all angles of these protective laws.
